NOTE - The story behind Flat Leilani, Flat Stanley's cousin:

Some of you may have heard of Flat Stanley. Maybe you or your kids have done this project. For those of you who haven't heard of this fellow, here's the background story. Flat Stanley started as a 1964 storybook by Jeff Brown. In 1995, school teacher Dale Hubert turned it into a project to promote letter writing. Many elementary school teachers participate in this project and it connects students from schools all around the world. You never know, one day, a Flat Stanley might even show up in your mailbox for a visit.

Or maybe his cousin, Flat Leilani!

INSTRUCTIONS

1. Download Flat Leilani image from www.benfranklinhawaii.com

Print out on cardstock or glue onto cardstock so that it is sturdy.

You can print on skin-tone cardstock if you don't want to color her whole body.

2. Print an extra copy to use for patterns for the clothing, shoes, etc.

Cut out just the body/dress to use as a pattern for clothing.

Cut the legs/feet to make a pattern for shoes.

Cut the hair and face to make patterns for different hair styles.

3. Color Flat Leilani image.

4. Cut Flat Leilani image out.

Place a wooden dowel or bamboo chopstick behind Flat Leilani to create a holder like for a puppet. Tape/glue securely in place.

5. Use printed or solid papers to create her dress and shoes. You can create your own clothing styles and accessories as well.

Position her clothing on her body and tape/glue in place.

Use stickers, cut-outs, etc. to add more embellishments.

6. Optional - create a second Flat Leilani piece but just decorate as the back side of her body.

Tape to the first body, sandwiching the dowel or chopstick in between.
